My wife's 2004 Polo Playa 1.4 16v is gevrek man. I wanna pull out the old engine and put in something that would be a straight fit. Will the 1.6 9N and 2.0 9N engine fit straight in there? Apart from the ECU, what else would I need to do the engine swap? Otherwise I'll just sell the whole car as is.

The 16 valve 1.6 unit should go in easily with minimal other changes. I'm not sure about space for the the 2.0 unit from the MkIII Golf GTi but the 8 valve 2.0 (only about 120bhp) is beautifully flexible and I preferred it to the 16 valve GTi, which, although ultimately quicker, didn't have that effortless go-in-any-gear type of feel.

Hey, Im looking at getting a Polo 9N 1.4 TDI. I was wondering if there were any upgrades that were fairly straight forward and give you a lot more power. Such as can you get a bigger turbo? Are there any bigger engines that just bolt straight in? I know about remaps but I want more power than that.

It depends which Polo version you have, I would recommend looking at the 1.8T engine, this responds very well to tuning and fits in most Polo engine bays. Focus on brakes and suspension before doing the engine swap. Some GTi, S3 or even Porsche brakes would work well but you might need larger alloys to house them.

Tuning the VW Polo - engine gearbox and suspension mods

See our Golf article on the potential of the 1.8T engine. This was an option in some countries and makes for a great engine swap option. The later turbo diesel models respond very well to a remap and this can increase your power by another 20-35%. Other modifications you should consider for your Polo engine.
